

TRAGEDY OF WAR AND ITS LIGHTER SIDE CAUGHT BY THE CAMERA

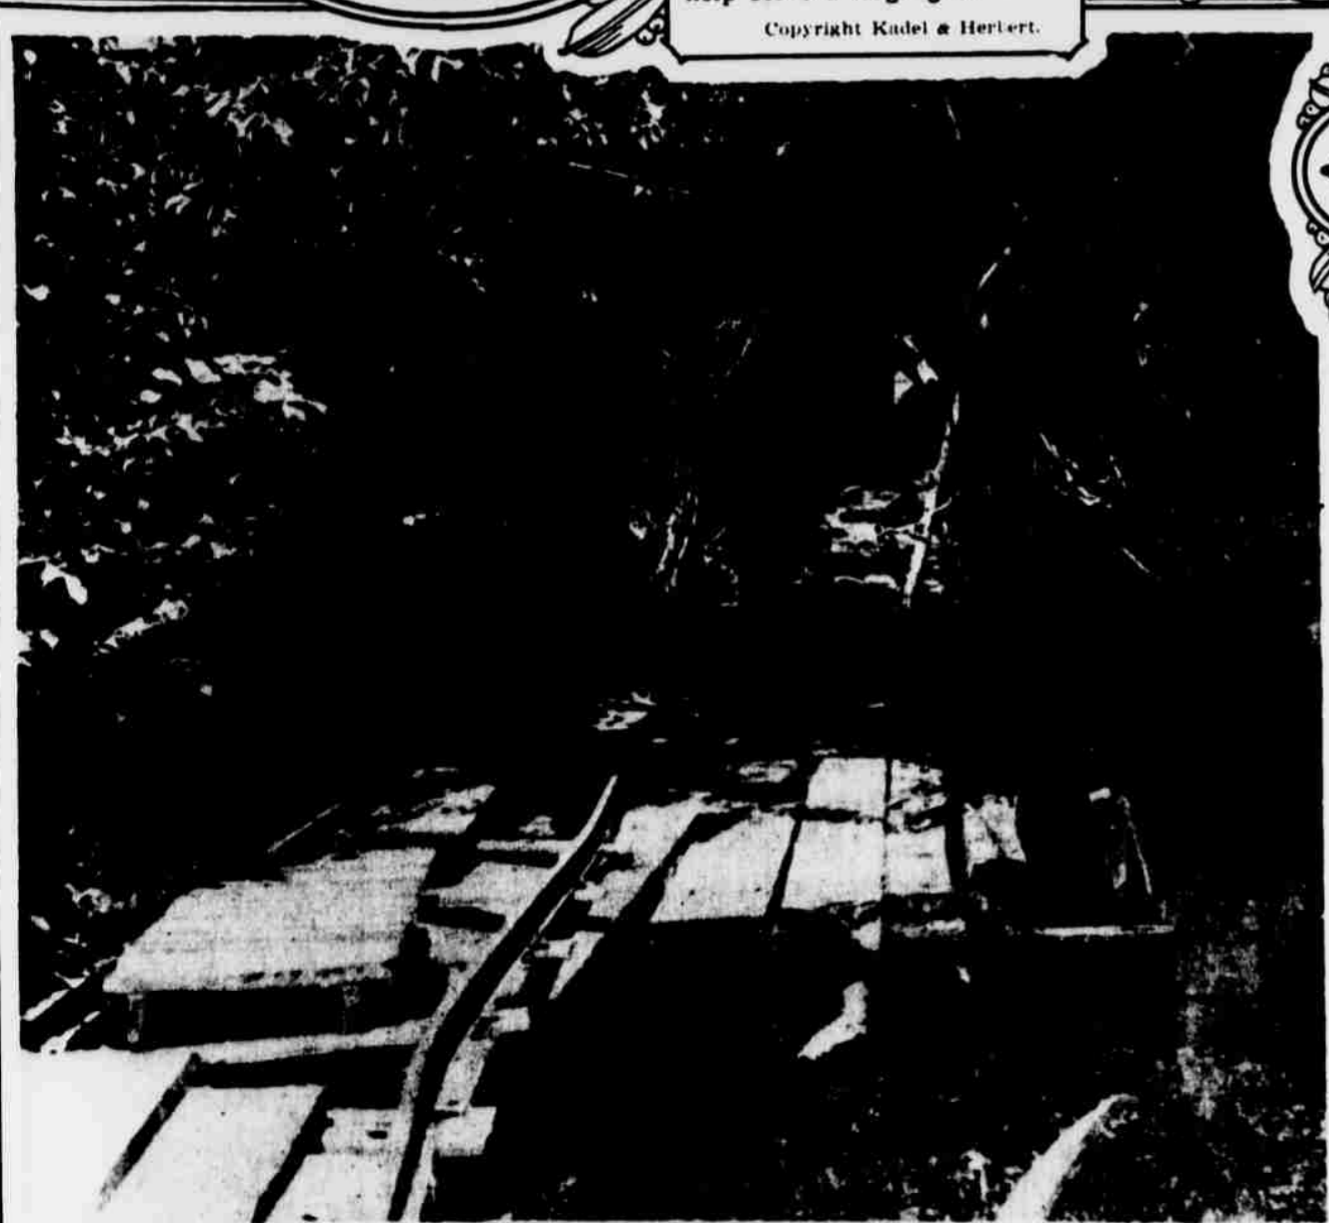

Refugees of Noyelles, who were rescued despite German machine gun fire in the Cambrai advance, resting. The British troops were kindness itself to the women and children. British Official.

All that is left of a beautiful forest that once crowned Hartmannsweiler-Kopf near the far eastern end of the French line. The position has changed hands repeatedly. Pictorial Press.

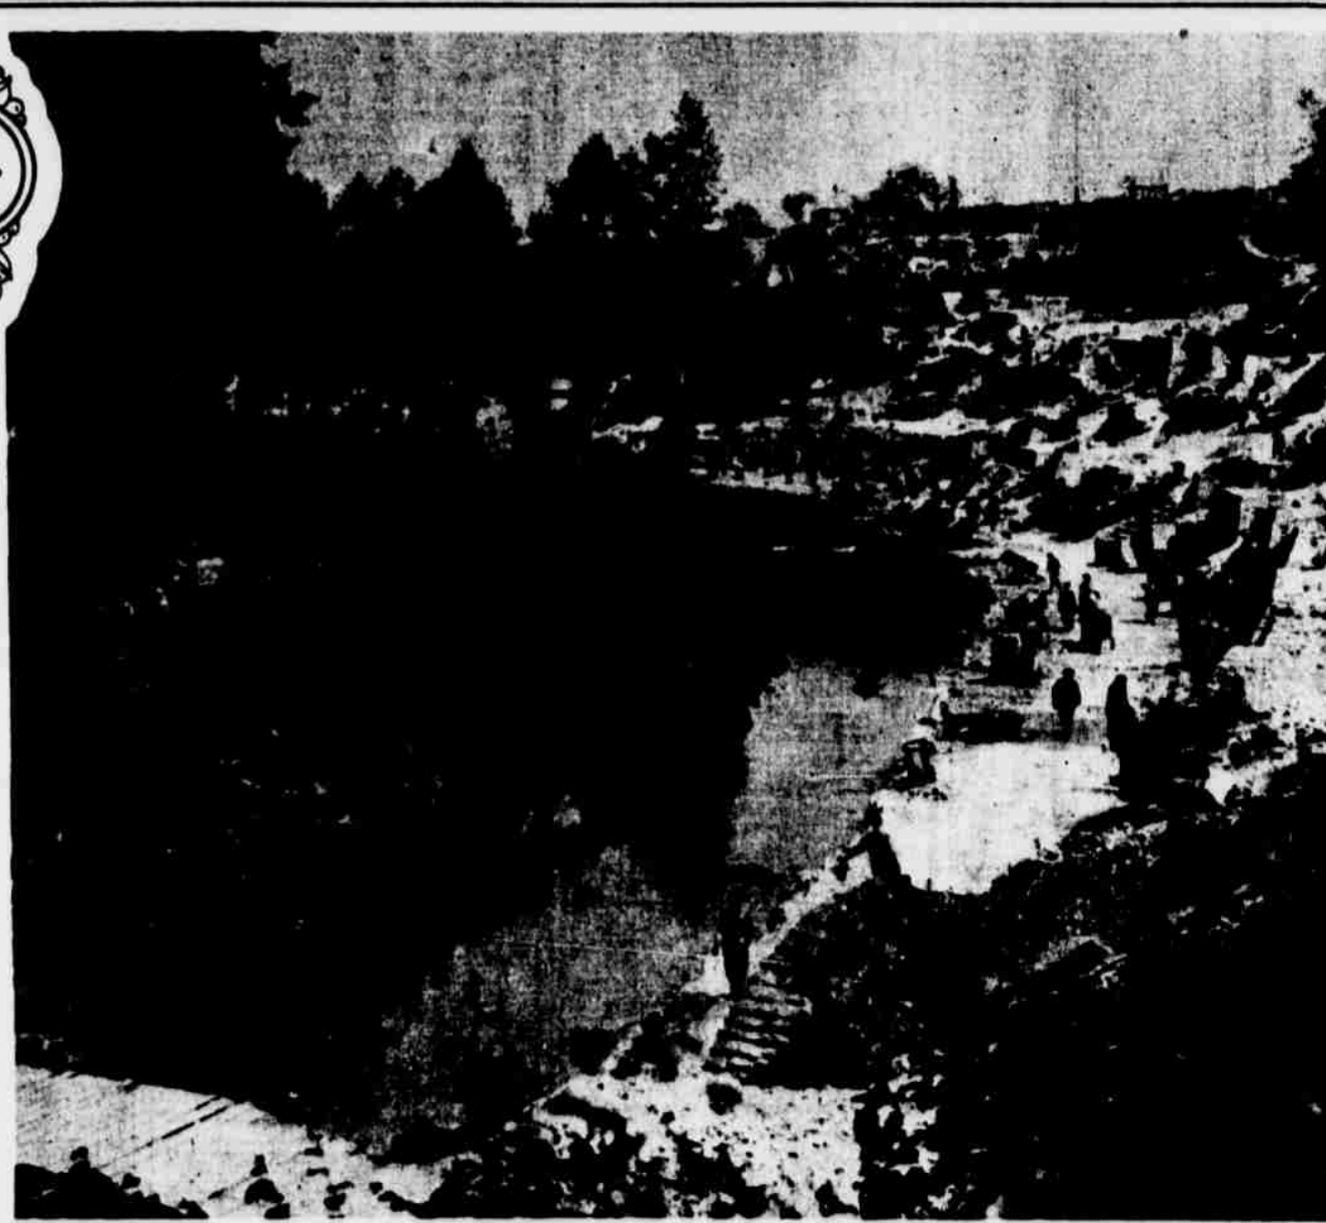

Two sturdy examples of our boys over there at a training camp somewhere in France. These two lads will help serve a large gun. Copyright Kadel & Hertert.

Here are four fun loving poilus having a boat ride on a lake in the upper Rhine country. They are convalescing from wounds and have been sent to this natural sanatorium to hasten their recovery. Pictorial Press.

How the boche thought to deceive the British by building a light railway line on the edge of a lake and concealing it with foliage. The sudden Cambrai advance uncovered the trick. Copyright Underwood & Underwood.

Undamaged trees back of the British line in France, a welcome sight after the usual scenes of shell fire devastation. The Tommyes resting here are busily washing and repairing equipment, preparatory to another tour of duty in the trenches. Copyright Underwood & Underwood.